Ranjana (Lantsa)

Guide Script
Devanagari

The Ranjana script is used for writing the Newari language of Nepal. This language is also called Nepal-Bhasha. The script was derived from Brahmi via the Old Nepal script, both of which are now extinct, around the 12th century AD. It has been used since that time in a gradually decreasing capacity, but is still used for producing Hindu and Buddhist religious texts and taught in Buddhist monasteries. It is also used as a decorative script in much the same way as calligraphy is used in the West. (from ScriptSource). Also see Wikipedia and Omniglot

For general character mapping notes, please refer to Script Matrix .

Ranjana is not yet encoded in Unicode. As a result, all of the existing fonts are either legacy 8-bit fonts or Unicode fonts that have been hack-encoded to Devanagari or Tibetan. Aksharamukkha uses a Devanagari-encoded Ranjana font as the default. In the absence of this font, the text will appear as plain Devanagari.

Ranjana being a pan-Indic script has several styles. There are two Tibetan styles, Lantsa and Wartu. These can be selected by enabling the respective option in the converter. These Tibetan-style fonts have been encoded in Tibetan Unicode and can be download from here.

None of the fonts are perfect. Some complex ligatures like /trya/ etc. are better supported by the tibetan-style fonts rather than the default one. Please choose the font that displays your text the best.

Ranjana (Lantsa)

Devanagari

The Ranjana script is used for writing the Newari language of Nepal. This language is also called Nepal-Bhasha. The script was derived from Brahmi via the Old Nepal script, both of which are now extinct, around the 12th century AD. It has been used since that time in a gradually decreasing capacity, but is still used for producing Hindu and Buddhist religious texts and taught in Buddhist monasteries. It is also used as a decorative script in much the same way as calligraphy is used in the West. (from ScriptSource). Also see Wikipedia and Omniglot
